Letter From The Principal

Dear Parents, Alumni and Friends,

I hope that the joy of the Easter season permeates your lives and that spring is truly a time of new life, especially after the long winter we have experienced! This school year has progressed very rapidly and we are already planning for the next one.

Some of the most memorable New Testament stories involve Jesus healing the sick in both body and soul. We all know about the blind and lame who could see and walk, the lepers who were made clean, and Lazarus who was raised from the dead because of their encounters with Christ. This issue of our newsletter focuses on several of our alumni who have followed the examples of both Christ and Saint Luke through their careers in the medical field. I am sure you will agree that while their credentials are impressive their dedication to the patients they serve is even more so. They truly care about both body and soul.

We are confident that our current students also care about others because of their willingness to coordinate and participate in food and clothing drives, the Dress for Success project, raising funds for the Christine Wilson Burn Center, and other projects that may sound familiar to you.

I also want to share some exciting news with you concerning our commitment to preparing our students for future careers in which they can continue to serve others while achieving professional success. We are enhancing our science curriculum so that it will include a focus on medical, public and community health areas in an experiential learning environment. Our plans include the renovation of several classrooms so the students can engage in hands-on learning activities. Stay tuned for more information about this exciting new endeavor in our next newsletter which will feature photos of our students in action!

May God continue to bless you and all those you love.

Sincerely,

Marian Hutson
Principal

St. Luke, the Beloved Physician

We discovered that many Bishop Watterson graduates found their calling in medicine, from nursing to physical therapy to doctors of every specialty, treating patients from coast to coast. A few of them are featured in this issue of the Eagle Review. We ask that St. Luke, patron saint of physicians and surgeons, watch over all of our alumni who found the passion to heal.

St. Luke, writer of the gospel and Acts of the Apostles, was a disciple of St. Paul and is believed to have been born a Greek and Gentile slave. Families at the time usually had a slave trained in medicine to care for them so it fits when St. Paul refers to him in Colossians 4:14 as, "Luke, the beloved physician." Four other saints from the early years of the church also refer to St. Luke as a physician.

Luke's gospel, which includes miracles and parables not found in the other gospels such as the Prodigal Son and the Annunciation, gives a sense that he saw hope in God's mercy for all.

Three Participate in Children's Hospital Program

Three Bishop Watterson seniors completed a six-week program at The Research Institute at Nationwide Children's Hospital last summer. The program, entitled Mechanisms of Human Health and Disease, is geared toward high-achieving incoming seniors with a passion for science. Students were selected for the program through a blind review process of applications and essays by a panel of researchers and physicians.

Congratulations to (left to right) seniors Bridget Geyer, Gino Dettorre and Marissa Wierzbicki, who were among a group of just 27 students selected for the program. Each completed an independent project in molecular pathophysiology. Dettorre graduated as top student in the program, securing an internship at The Research Institute during this school year. Wierzbicki finished fourth, qualifying her to receive dedicated mentorship and to participate in the program in 2015 as a teaching assistant.

Philanthropic Business Club

Bishop Watterson's Business Club presented a check for $3,000 to the Christine Wilson Burn Unit of Nationwide Children's Hospital at the Respect Life Mass in October. Business Club raised the money through bake sales, Sunday with Santa and its first-ever 5K race in June. Also at the Mass, Tim and Pam Wilson, who presented the Christine Wilson Foundation's annual scholarship to an incoming freshman, spoke of the love Christine '01 had for Bishop Watterson, and her appreciation for her BWHS education. In addition, BWHS Student Council sponsored a new-and-gently-used book drive for Children's Hospital.

DiOrio's Diagnosis: Eagle Fever

If a football stadium goes silent during a game, something is terribly wrong. Most often when it happens a player has sustained a frightening injury but during the Bishop Watterson game at Bishop Hartley in the Fall of 2012, it was referee Julius Palazzo who just dropped to the ground. Dr. Doug DiOrio '86 sprinted from the Bishop Watterson sidelines and began CPR while the crowd went silent. A moment later, the stadium began to pray, out loud.

DiOrio was on the sidelines doing what he normally does at athletic events—watching for injuries.

"I am always watching the field for injuries and I saw him go down," said DiOrio. "Nobody was near him and he fell straight forward. I just happened to be standing on the same yard line Julius was on. He was obviously in trouble."

The EMT squad joined him right away. "I heard Doug yell, 'Clear!'" BWHS Athletic Director Mike Roark recalled.

"It was amazing. He had one shock and he opened his eyes and he was back with us," DiOrio remembered. "It was quite miraculous how quickly he came back and returned to us. When someone has a heart attack in the field they only survive 15 percent of the time."

DiOrio, who practices both family and sports medicine, credits the spontaneous prayer on both the Bishop Watterson and Bishop Hartley sides of the field.

"I truly believe there was divine intervention that brought him back," DiOrio said.

Palazzo, who knew DiOrio from Diocesan sports, said he remembers exactly when he went down. "We had just finished a play and were getting ready for another play. I was standing there as a ref, blew my whistle and everything got fuzzy," said Palazzo. "I am very thankful to Doug and the others. I feel so blessed that I came through it and I really feel there was some intervention from above – all of those people doing what they could whether through prayer or trying to resuscitate me – I'm so thankful every day."

It was a blessing for Palazzo that DiOrio was standing where he was at the very moment he was needed. DiOrio has been a blessing for numerous student-athletes at Bishop Watterson since he began volunteering as team doctor in 1995. For these 19 years he has been visible on the sidelines of every football game but his work has impacted even more athletes.

The Guza family has sent three very athletic boys through Bishop Watterson: Matt '08 and twins Mark and Michael '14. The Guzas participated in cross country, soccer, tennis, track, and wrestling.

"Dr. DiOrio has been phenomenal!" said mom Nancy Guza, a nurse herself. "He understands the urgency to return to the field, mat or court, but balances that with safety and healing. He is realistic in his expectations of returning to play, which is appreciated."

Guza said Matt once hurt his ankle in wrestling and the family followed up with Dr. DiOrio, who caught a misdiagnosed fracture.

"Dr. DiOrio treated Mark for a variety of injuries, including a hamstring injury, a fractured fibula and a concussion," said Guza. "After his concussion last year, Mark continued to have headaches which we attributed to the head injury; however, Dr. DiOrio realized the headaches were not from the concussion but from a neck strain. He manipulated Mark's neck and the headaches disappeared."

Athletic Director Roark tells the story of a time when his own knee was hurting and Dr. DiOrio was treating him.

"We were at a baseball game and my knee had really flared up so Doug and I went behind the dugout and he gave me an injection in the knee just as a parent came around the corner," Roark said. "When asked what he was doing, without hesitation Doug said, 'I'm helping the people who help your kids.'"

DiOrio, who currently runs and plays tennis to stay in shape, admits he loves being involved in sports and the competition that comes with them. He has run the Columbus and Chicago marathons as well as some half marathons. He has also done triathlons. One of his biggest athletic accomplishments was as a walk-on for the Notre Dame football team in the Lou Holtz era. In fact, DiOrio is mentioned in two of Holtz's books.

DiOrio graduated from Bishop Watterson in 1986 and headed to the University of Notre Dame with the Joyce Scholarship.

"On a visit, I went to the football office and said I'd like to walk on," recalled DiOrio, who was a member of the 1988 National Championship team as a junior free safety. "I came home and sent films and they reviewed them and invited me to walk on in the fall. When you talk about things that shape how you do things in your life, that was one of them for me. Lou Holtz was a great influence. He talked about work ethic, how to put a winning team together, and how to have success. Outside of my parents, the experience of playing football at Notre Dame for Lou Holtz was probably the most influential thing in my life."

DiOrio left Bishop Watterson thinking he would probably go into biomedical engineering but graduated from Notre Dame with a B.S. in biology. By the time he entered medical school at Ohio State, he was certain he wanted to get involved with sports medicine.

"In sports medicine we get people back on the playing field faster, and getting people back to doing what they enjoy is gratifying." Besides sports medicine, DiOrio is board-certified in family medicine and integrative and holistic medicine with a special interest in medical acupuncture and manipulation.

Jodi Gibbs, a Physician Assistant for OhioHealth Breast and Cancer Surgeons, refers breast cancer patients dealing with post-surgery and treatment issues to DiOrio for procedures like acupuncture, massage therapy and nutrition services.

"Dr. DiOrio has headed up an integrative medicine program at OhioHealth to help meet the needs of patients," Gibbs said. "I continue to get positive feedback from patients who have seen him and I am so thankful to him for taking the time to provide a program that meets so many needs

After office hours, DiOrio is in the BWHS training room once a week, checking on his student patients.

"He sees kids in our training room which gives them the opportunity to see a physician without having to go to a doctor's office. It's more immediate care instead of waiting a week or two," said BWHS Trainer Erick Boucher. "He donates all of this time and never asks for anything. He enjoys doing it. He likes to be here for the kids and helping Watterson."

"People think of the team doctor as the football doctor," DiOrio said. "I love seeing all of the kids in all of the sports."

DiOrio's son Joey '14 played on the basketball teams that won the state championship in '13 and finished runner-up in '14. Joey also ran cross country and played baseball. His daughter, Claire '16 runs cross country and track for the Eagles and Johnny '21 is a sixth grader at St. Timothy. His wife, Mary, also an M.D., was recently named Medical Director for the Ohio Department of Health.

"I started in 1995 at Watterson because I like to help, but now it's fun to have my kids here," he said. "Watterson really prepared me for college academically and as a family, a community. That is something I wanted to stay involved in. I wanted to give back."

According to folks in the BWHS community, he has done more than treat injuries.

"Dr. DiOrio would often be seen at the cross country meets stretching and massaging leg muscles of the injured runners," said Guza. "From diagnosis of an injury to treatment and physical therapy, he considers a variety of treatment options, including acupuncture. Bishop Watterson is blessed to have him as a team physician."

"I love my personal interactions and relationships I can build with people. I receive personal gratification from making people healthier."

of those who have gone through and are going through a life-changing journey."

Gibbs said she even convinced her husband, who has back problems, to see DiOrio.

"After a lot of convincing, he finally went," she said. "He has been so pleased with the results that any time we see someone with any pain he says, 'I've got just the guy you need to go see.'"

Connecting is Key for Morrison

We hear a lot these days about balance, particularly work-life balance. For many of us, on the surface it means being where we need to be when we need to be there and squeezing in some down time to do it all over again. For Laura Morrison, M.D. '88, finding balance is even more important as she works with people coming to terms with challenges of life. Connecting with patients and doctors is critical to helping the patients heal and the doctors learn.

Morrison splits her time between seeing patients and the business of creating and running a palliative care fellowship program at Yale School of Medicine. For over a year now she has been an Associate Professor of Medicine in Geriatrics, Associate Clinical Professor of Nursing, Director of Hospice and Palliative Medicine Education and Director of the Hospice and Palliative Medicine Fellowship.

It's a challenge to keep up with all of the exciting projects and responsibilities but for Morrison the path is motivating and rewarding.

"It's a fantastic opportunity and I feel very fortunate every day to be able to create this program at Yale with my colleagues," Morrison said. "Bishop Watterson provided me with a really strong, consistent base. I worked hard there and I received excellent preparation for college. Watterson really required and drew out that continued hard work."

Morrison graduated from Bishop Watterson sensing she was headed toward medicine. A captain of the Eagles swim team, she went on to swim for Oberlin College, and then to Case Western Reserve for medical school, internship and residency.

"I headed toward palliative care at the end of my residency because I was drawn even more into the patient-physician relationship," she said. "I found the rotations with HIV and oncology patients to be particularly meaningful in the sense of having difficult things to discuss. This area of challenging but more meaningful conversations is one place where I felt drawn to make a contribution. It's certainly not appealing to all health care providers. It's more intimate."

Laura Morrison, M.D. '88

Palliative care is specialized medical care for people of any age with serious illnesses of any stage. With the goal of improving the quality of life for the patient and family, the focus of palliative care is to provide relief of pain, stress and other symptoms associated with a serious illness.

"Palliative care is not just end-of-life care. It is for anyone with a serious illness, even early in the course. Some of our patients recover," said Morrison. "The first time I had the opportunity to learn about palliative care, it was a revelatory experience. It was like, 'Wow! This is what matters to me!' My strengths seemed to line up with it. There is an opportunity in almost every situation to help make things better, whether just sitting with a family, relieving a symptom, or helping someone define the legacy they hope to leave."

After her residency at Case Western, Morrison did a two-year fellowship in Geriatrics-Palliative Care at Baylor College of Medicine and worked at Baylor in that field for 11 years, until Yale drew her away in 2013 to create its new palliative care education program.

During her years at Baylor, Morrison became part of a strong network of local and national palliative care specialists through her work as a clinician and educator.

"These colleagues provide incredible peer mentoring and camaraderie. We have opportunities to collaborate on presentations, committees and projects to move the field forward. It's that supportive," she said. "Not only is the important work with our patients and their families what drives all of us, but our connections with each other are meaningful. We need to nurture our own resiliency in the midst of loss to keep doing the work. It's an amazing experience and one of the things I really appreciate most now."

In her new position, Morrison splits her time between taking care of patients in the hospital and teaching.

"This was the perfect opportunity for me to put into practice everything I've been learning and developing," she said. "My first task was to start a hospice and palliative medicine fellowship program which is perfect for me because I had been doing a lot of education work in Houston and on a national level, defining what fellows must learn in their training. We have our first two Yale fellows this year and I'm having a great time creating things as we go!"

On a typical day in the hospital, she is consulted on six to eight new patients, has an interdisciplinary meeting that involves a team of social workers, chaplain, nurse practitioners, physician assistant, and fellows or other learners. Patients and families are supported in whatever needs they have – sometimes just checking in, managing complex symptoms or revisiting "goals of care."

On other days, Morrison might be planning the fellowship curriculum, mentoring trainees on academic projects, teaching communication skills to other learners, writing for publication, participating on conference calls, or serving as a backup doctor to see patients.

"I occasionally hear from patients, their family members, or even colleagues that I seem to be in the right field where my gifts are being put to good use. That's always reassuring," she said. "Palliative care allows me to blend the latest rigorous science around management of many serious illnesses with this focus on quality of life and interpersonal and communication involvement."

Looking back at her career path, Morrison says there was no light guiding her toward palliative care specifically, but she was always heading in that direction.

Even in high school, Morrison's service experiences were preparing her for her future career.

"I think one of the best parts of Watterson is the service requirement," she said. "A lot of my service time was spent at Whetstone Convalescence Center. I visited different residents there on a regular basis and I think that, along with the positive relationships I had with my grandparents, led me to the focus of being a doctor in the geriatrics direction."

Another less obvious factor was the sense of community she felt in high school. In fact, she is the godmother of current BWHS students Katlyn and Shannon Lynch, whose parents, Jill Smiley '88 and Jeffrey Lynch '88 were classmates.

"High school in general is hard for most kids," said Morrison, whose parents still live in Columbus. "What I remember the most is the sense of community at Watterson with daily morning prayer and the close-knit feel. It was quite meaningful to me to hear about celebrations and losses in the community. I remember going to two or three funerals and celebrating the success of sports teams. Even though I didn't come from a feeder school and have the specific sense of community the Catholic schools create, I really appreciated the sense of community the whole time I was there."

Simmers Finds His Stride in Study of Artery Tissue

Phillip Simmers, '07

When he graduated from Bishop Watterson, Phillip Simmers planned to go into physical therapy, but two degrees later, he has had two papers published in the Journal of Tissue Engineering.

"I had no idea I was going to do biomedical engineering," said Simmers. "The only thing I knew was that I was going to the University of Cincinnati. My dad went there and I was raised a Bearcat so I always knew I was going there, just as I knew I was going to Watterson."

He discovered Biomedical Engineering by chance.

"I was going to go into physical therapy but my dad gave me an article about biomedical engineering. I loved anatomy and Doc Eberst's physics class. This encompasses all of the things I love."

He earned his bachelor's degree from the University of Cincinnati in 2012, then earned a Masters in Biomedical Engineering from Cleveland State University in May 2014. His thesis – "Nitric Oxide Stimulates Matrix Synthesis and Deposition by Adult Human Smooth Muscle Cells Within Biometric Cocultures" – was also presented at the Tissue Engineering & Regenerative Medicine International Society Conference in late 2014. In addition, his first professional article, "Nitric Oxide Stimulates Matrix Synthesis and Deposition by Adult Human Aortic Smooth Muscle Cells Within Three-Dimensional Cocultures," was recently published in Tissue Engineering Part A.

"Our main goal with the study was not to provide an alternative treatment, but to provide baseline studies in an innovative manner so that future studies can take our study and move forward to find new treatments for aneurysms," Simmers said. "With tissue engineering, we are looking at ways to deliver a drug through a microfluidic device that would rebuild the structure of the artery using the original tissue to heal it."

At age 26, Simmers is currently the lead consultant on a project with Proctor and Gamble, and pursuing a doctorate in Biomedical Engineering at Cincinnati.

"A lot of people already know that Watterson is one of the best prep schools in central Ohio. They demand a lot out of you," Simmers said. "A high school student might not realize that Bishop Watterson demanding a lot out of you prepares you for the real world. Even a lot of the feeder schools are demanding, too. That's what's great about Watterson ... that it prepares you for life."

Bigley Battles Burns

Andrea Bigley '89 and Sparky the Fire Dog are buds. In her position as Burn Program Manager for The Ohio State University Wexner Medical Center, Bigley and Sparky spend a lot of time in the community talking about fire prevention. Sparky wants to teach everyone how to avoid causing fires and Bigley's mission is to prevent burns.

Bigley did not start off in this specialized position. After graduating from Mount Carmel College of Nursing in 1997, she spent the early years of her career as a sort of nomadic nurse. She would take contracted assignments of several months long as a travel nurse and the result is that she had the opportunity to see areas of the country she might not otherwise have visited.

"It was kind of fun because as a travel nurse you can go to different places and some of your travel expenses and living arrangements are covered," she said.

It was during a stint in Arizona that she was introduced to burn nursing.

"When a person goes into the hospital for a procedure or surgery, they are in a couple of days and then leave. Even with a trauma the person is in intensive care and then leaves," Bigley said. "Burn units are specialized. A person stays in the unit for a long time. As a nurse you get to know the patients and families. You see their progression and you get to see them move on and then you get to see them in the outpatient clinic."

Bigley said she enjoyed her assignment in a burn unit more than she enjoyed the hot Arizona desert, so when the position opened at OSU and it included clinical education, she made the leap and came home to Columbus.

The transition back to Columbus has gone smoothly for her and daughter Rachel, who is a sophomore at BWHS this year.

"We moved in the middle of eighth grade, so Rachel went to Our Lady of Peace for six months and it was a great transition," Bigley said. "I think the program is very caring. They bent over backwards to include her, all the way to the parents. There was a lot more communication because it's a community and not just a school."

As Burn Program Manager, she oversees the entire program, including patient care, specialized care, resources and outpatient care in addition to prevention outreach and communication. She also manages the burn fund that helps patients pay for garments they have to wear for a year or two and things not covered by insurance such as compression materials that can positively impact body movement.

Bigley spends up to half of her time on burn prevention programs and training EMS professionals about how to treat burns.

"We teach EMS crews how to assess burns, what dressings to put on them and cover other things they need to think about," said Bigley.

The most common kind of burns seen at OSU are from building fires, flammable liquids and gases and scalds from hot liquids and steam. Another type of injury they treat, among others, would be tissue damage from cold injuries like frost bite. "When you work with patients you watch their transition from burn victim to burn survivor," Bigley said. "Burns change people. It changes their lives but they figure out how to make it work for them. They don't let it get them down which is a part of humanity that is fascinating."

Options for care have improved in recent years, but burns still require more time with medical care.

"In the last five years especially some of the technology has improved but, historically, a deep third-degree burn to a forearm might have someone in the hospital for a week because they might need that much pain control," Bigley said. "Thanks to technology we may be able to leave a dressing on for a week instead of changing the dressing every day which is painful."

Bigley also holds an MSN degree from Grand Canyon University and feels her education at Bishop Watterson gave her a solid foundation in preparation for her path in nursing.

"When I moved to Arizona and was working with aides in the hospitals and they were talking about going to school and becoming nurses, I'd say, 'Just go to school.' They would say it wasn't that easy because their schools had not prepared them because they weren't college prep schools," she said. "When I realized that people graduated and didn't have a college prep curriculum behind them, I was even more appreciative of the education I received. I felt like school was so much easier in general because of all of the tools I was given."

Preventing Burns

- Don't leave candles unattended
- Hot water tanks should be at 120 degrees or less
- Never put water on a grease fire

"We see a lot of grease burns," said Bigley. "People try to put water on it but it splatters or they try to take the burning pan outside and it spills. Put a lid on it. It will stop and no one gets injured."

Darryl Willett, M.D. '83

Willett Enjoying Life as an ENT Doctor

There aren't many Ear, Nose and Throat doctors who have the opportunity to participate in a surgery on a gorilla with a bad ear infection or an orangutan having trouble swallowing, but Darryl Willett '83 is one of the lucky ones. Willett, who majored in zoology in college as many doctors have done, worked with veterinarian surgeons at the Columbus Zoo, where his sister, Tanya Willett '88, works as a zoo keeper.

When he graduated from Bishop Watterson, Willett planned to major in marine biology at Ohio State, but that was not to be. Midway into his freshman year, his plans changed thanks to an advisor's encouragement to spend some time in an emergency room.

And so Willett learned early on that making connections can help you find your path and those connections can make your progress on that path a little smoother. Willett has been sharing his wisdom with BWHS students on career days.

"I tell kids to get to know their college advisors, because my advisor, Wayne Parrish, made a huge difference in my life. We were very close and did a lot of research together," he said. "In fact, he and I developed a chemotherapy drug together and have a patent together."

Willett won the Joyce Scholarship and was given a choice of attending Notre Dame or Ohio State after he graduated from Bishop Watterson. He chose Ohio State because he knew he wanted to go into medicine and liked the fact that OSU had a hospital system. He went on to complete medical school and his residency at Ohio State as well.

"I knew I wanted to be a surgeon but there are so many different options and you think, 'How am I going to figure this out?'" Willett said. "I met with Arthur

"You've got to wake up on Monday morning and say, 'I love my job!' because if you wake up and are miserable you'll only be in medicine for a short time."

James as a freshman or sophomore in medical school. He told me if I wanted to be a surgeon, the best field to go into was ENT. I had a long-term relationship with him because he was my wife's uncle so we would talk at family gatherings. The key for young people is not to be afraid of influential people. They're human beings, too."

While pursuing his bachelor's degree, Willett also reached out to cardiologist Dr. Charles Wooley and nephrologist Dr. Lee Hebert, both of whom had children who attended BWHS with Willett.

"Dr. Wooley was a staunch military guy who helped me learn how to interview and Dr. Hebert introduced me to research labs," Willett said. "When my friends were heading out to the bars I figured I could get some work done in the lab and still have fun. There's always time in the day to incorporate things that will enhance your portfolio. College is a time of self control."

During college, Willett and his now-wife Jennifer, who is an endodontist, spent some evenings volunteering in the emergency room at OSU.

"I was fortunate that I could burn the candle at both ends and not feel the pain the next day," he said. "It's something you do get trained to do."

In addition to seeing patients and being on call at Riverside Methodist and Nationwide Children's Hospital, Willett is President of OhioENT and Allergy Physicians, which is a group of multiple practices in Columbus. The business, a $70 million enterprise, encompasses sleep centers, hearing aid and allergy businesses.

"We're trained as doctors but we also need a business mind," he said. "If you don't have a business mind you probably won't get along as well as you would have otherwise. Insurance rates have not paid well over the last few years."

Willett previously sat on an interview board for OSU medical school as well.

"I always felt like everybody looks the same on paper so how do you separate 14 valedictorians from the cream of the crop? It's not enough to be a smart kid," Willett said. "I liked to see the people who have the drive to be the leader. If they can do that and balance it with good grades, they're probably the people you want in your program."

When he takes time off from his numerous responsibilities, Willett makes time to travel with Jennifer and their three children: Caitlin '12, Cullen '14 and Holden '17. They have been all over the world to fly fish and scuba dive. He said he has been blessed to be able to explore that world for fun and still come back to a profession he enjoys.

"You've got to wake up on Monday morning and say, 'I love my job!' because if you wake up and are miserable you'll only be in medicine for a short time."

St. Joseph of Arimathea Society

Bishop Watterson began a pallbearer society under the patronage of St. Joseph of Arimathea, the man who took the body of Jesus from the cross and placed it in his own new tomb. The group, now in its third year, consists of 18 young men – juniors and seniors – who have been trained and commissioned for this service of assisting at the burial of the departed. The SJA Society has a monthly meeting to discuss issues, talk about experiences, and to pray for the faithful departed, especially those whom they have recently served.

Spiers Awards Presented

Four students were honored with the 2014 Monsignor Spiers Service Awards, which have been an important part of the BWHS homecoming celebration for more than twenty years. This award is named after Msgr. Edward Spiers who founded our school in 1954 and served as the first principal. It was instituted by Student Council to honor and celebrate individuals who have upheld his commitment to the Christian values of service and education by performing outstanding service in both our school and the community.

Each of these students, chosen by a selection committee, has performed at least 500 hours of service and took the time to complete a lengthy application. In making its decision, the selection committee considered not only the number of hours of service performed by students but also the longevity and quality of service performed. The committee also reviewed a student's involvement in activities at both Bishop Watterson and in the greater Columbus community. Finally, the committee considered how a student exhibited leadership in engaging others in service activities.

WOMAN of the YEAR

Handbell Choir Added to Curriculum

Handbell Choir is the latest addition to the BWHS performing arts curriculum, offered for the first time during the 2014-2015 school year. Choral teacher Christen Joyce wanted to offer a different way to experience music and perform in an ensemble setting beyond the traditional choir or band options. So, with the support of the Choir Boosters and BWHS Mothers' Club, she purchased a three-octave set of handbells and materials needed to launch a handbell program.

"I had learned to play handbells at my church when I was in high school and continued playing during college," said Miss Joyce. "My only hope was that there would be enough students intrigued to give this unusual class a try. My prayers were answered and this school year began with close to forty students signed up to participate!"

Students started the year learning the proper techniques for holding and ringing the bells. They are also learning music literacy skills such as how to count rhythms and read note names on a musical staff. These are musical skills that they can transfer to any other musical pursuit. One of the unique aspects about participation in a handbell choir is the team effort that it takes to play a piece.

Food Drive Competition Helps Area Food Pantries

This year the annual food drive conducted at BWHS took on a couple of fun twists. First, the drive became a competition between the Eagles and the Stallions of St. Francis DeSales. The other fun element was that, for a $20 donation, students could wear their BWHS spirit wear sweatshirts, boys could grow their beards for the duration of the three-week competition and girls could wear boots. "We have our annual food drive so that we are able to give back to our community," said Student Council Vice President and senior Aaron Lucki. "This year I think that our competition with DeSales has made the food drive fun and will hopefully motivate all the students to donate in some way." While Bishop Watterson won the competition with 16,979 donated items, the true winners were the food pantries who serve those in need in our community.

ST. JOHN PAUL II LEGACY SOCIETY BISHOP WATTERSON HIGH SCHOOL

This year we will celebrate 60 years of educating students in the Catholic tradition.

Each year, we ask for your contributions to the Annual Eagle Fund in order to help us continue the Bishop Watterson tradition of “Exemplary Catholic Education, Rooted in Faith, Committed to Excellence.” Additionally, we look to planned gifts as a way to ensure the longevity of our mission and school.

By definition, planned giving is a major gift that comes from the donor’s financial or estate planning. Gifts could come from appreciated securities or stock, real estate, a retirement plan or even cash – but they are generally made from outside of one’s discretionary income. Some donors are in a position to make the gift (or multiple gifts) during their lifetime, but many make the gift as a bequest in their will. Planned gifts can offer many benefits to the donor, including tax benefits or the potential for returned income.

Often, a planned gift is put into an endowment fund, which allows the one-time gift to grow and provides a permanent source of funds for the intended beneficiary. Bishop Watterson is blessed to receive financial support from several endowment funds created by generous donors. We ask you to consider making a contribution to these existing funds or, if you are able, consider opening your own endowment fund with Bishop Watterson High School as the beneficiary.

Currently, The Catholic Foundation manages our existing endowments. In the coming months, Bishop Watterson will implement several planned giving initiatives to support our school. We are excited to again partner with The Catholic Foundation to provide the planned giving options that best suit your family and your financial goals. Loren Brown, President and CEO of The Catholic Foundation, served as the keynote speaker at the inaugural St. Paul John II Legacy Society Speaker Series held in Dominican Hall on April 16.

We ask you to prayerfully consider your role in supporting these upcoming initiatives. We are continually blessed by your generosity and commitment to Bishop Watterson High School, and we hope to work together towards a goal of ensuring an excellent Catholic education for our future students.
